

Another message from the Universe

If you're really honest, Shari, you have to admit that things today, in your most amazing life, at this most amazing time in history, are far better than they've ever, ever been. Well done, The Universe

My messages from the Universe certainly zero in on things I am thinking about. This week I had a dear friend who stopped at DFW on her way west and spent a few days with me. We lived in Albuquerque at the same time, but since have both moved. Showing her my life, it did make me realize how good that I do have it. I have a gorgeous place to live, people to play cards with, a pool to exercise in, plans for the future with my son and daughter-in-law, fuzzy aliens who live with me and whom I love, a great spiritual resource in the UUCOC, great friends and great neighbors. At this point in my life I appreciate all the things that I do have, but I am concerned that some of the things I have predicated the rest of my life on are being threatened, including my Social Security and Medicare. But I cannot dwell on those things, as I am so grateful for all that I do have and intend to enjoy as long as they are here!
